

BOSS DAVIS'S OBLIGATIONS

HIS INDEBTEDNESS TO HUDSON COUNTY COLLECTOR.

Schedule of Amounts Borrowed Aggregating Some $300,000 for the Hudson County Collector.

James R. Bowen, counsel for Mrs. Annie Toppin Davis, who became the third wife of the late City Collector Robert Davis, denys that Democratic leader of Hudson county, New Jersey, six days before his death at his home, 239 Grove street, Jersey City, on January 9, said yesterday that his client will resist the payment of $50,000 in claims filed by County Collector Stephen M. Egan for money loaned by him to Davis in 1909. The charges have been unofficially made and it has not been denied by Egan that these moneys were advanced by him out of funds in the county treasury as a personal favor to Davis. It was said on good authority last night that Egan does not now owe a dollar to the county and that the money advanced by him for the bond satisfied that every dollar of balances due the county will be found intact.

EGAN'S SWORN STATEMENT OF DAVIS'S OBLIGATIONS TO HIM IS AS FOLLOWS:

In the matter of the estate of Robert Davis, late of Jersey City, county of Hudson, Stephen M. Egan, being duly sworn according to law, on his oath deposes and says that he is a creditor of the estate of said Robert Davis for the sum of eighty thousand five hundred dollars ($80,500) for moneys loaned by him to said Robert Davis in his lifetime as follows: July 7, 1909, $10,000; July 7, 1909, $10,000; July 7, 1909, $10,000; July 7, 1909, $10,000; August 4, 1909, $10,000; total, $80,500. That said sums of money respectively were loaned by him to said Robert Davis, he agreeing to return the same upon demand, that he said Davis, in consideration of the loan, gave him promissory notes, copies whereof are hereto annexed and made a part hereof, that all the said notes except upon the loan of $10,000, were signed by said Robert Davis individually, that the note for $10,000 was signed by Robert Davis, Jr., for said Robert Davis, his father, that the said loan of $10,000 on August 4, 1909, was made to Robert Davis, deceased, and not to his son, Robert Davis, Jr., that said note of Robert Davis, Jr., was taken upon a memorandum of the loan, as were the other notes. And deponent further says that no part of the foregoing claim has been repaid to him, but that the whole sum of $80,500 therein named is justly due and owing to him from the estate of said Robert Davis, that deponent is unable to tell at the present time as to whether the above indebtedness covers his whole claim against said estate and therefore reserves the right to put in a further claim, and that the filing of this claim is not to be considered as any limitation of his total claim.

STEWART M. EGAN. The note for $31,500 signed by Davis's son, Robert Davis, Jr., was made payable on demand at the Union Trust Company of New Jersey. It was dated "Jersey City, 1909." All the other notes which Davis gave Egan were also made payable at the same bank. Four of the notes were the indebtedness of Robert Davis, Jr., and George W. Henry, Davis's right hand man in the Jersey City Supply Company.

Lawyer Bowen, commenting on the claims, said he failed to understand how the note signed by young Davis could be collected from the estate.

The fact that Davis was indebted to County Collector Egan for borrowed money became public as the result of the action of Mrs. Davis in starting proceedings in the Orphans Court for a revocation of the order appointing herself and Robert Davis, Jr., administrators of her husband's estate and asking for the appointment of herself as the sole administrator. She raised the point that the will of her husband made prior to his marriage to Mary Dugan, daughter of the late County Collector Hugh Dugan, was admitted to probate, was not a legal document and put in a claim for a share in her husband's personal property in addition to her dower rights in his real estate.

The personality consists of stocks, bonds and a large amount of jewelry of all descriptions which was found after the Democratic leader's death. Robert Davis, Jr., and his brothers objected, it is said, to dividing with the widow and a breach occurred which resulted in the retaining of Lawyer Bowen by Mrs. Davis to prosecute a fight for what she considered was her fair share in all her husband's personal effects. Notices were served on County Collector Egan and Walter O'Mara, clerk of the Hudson county Board of Freeholders, to file any outstanding claims against the estate and Davis's dealings with the County Collector became public.

Some of the personal property was found in an old safe in the County Collector's office at the City Hall, Jersey City, on January 17, eight days after City Collector Davis's death. Davis died without telling anybody the combination to the safe, and experts from the office of a safe company were hired to open it. It was forced open in the presence of Deputy City Collector Charles J. Somers, Mrs. Davis, the widow; Davis's sons, Robert, Jr., and George W. Henry; former State Senator William D. Edwards, counsel for the estate; Edward I. Edwards, cashier of the First National Bank of Jersey City, now State Comptroller of New Jersey; and Robert Elliott, chief clerk in the office.

Deputy City Collector Somers said yesterday he was in charge of the office at the time and it was considered perfectly proper by himself and all hands that the safe, although city property, should be opened, as it had been used by Davis for his personal papers and property. Mr. Somers said that Davis had not told him of any money he had hidden in the safe and some jewelry were found. City Clerk Michael I. Fagan said last night that he signed a city warrant for the services of the experts in forcing open the safe.

It is expected that a resolution calling for the appointment of a special Senate committee to investigate the County Collector's office and the office of the Board of Freeholders in Hudson county will be introduced in the State Senate next Monday night. The Senate is controlled by the Republicans and Hudson county has been in the hands of the Democrats nearly all the time that Davis was in control of the Democratic machine.

State Senator James F. Fiedler of Hudson county said yesterday that he had the opinion that most of the talk of an investigation of Hudson county affairs by a Senate committee was due to a desire on the part of the Republicans to secure political advantage.

"If there is anything wrong in County Collector Egan's office," he said, "the Republican Judge John J. Hendon, the Republican Prosecutor of Hudson county can care care of the situation."

Prosecutor of the Peace Pierre P. Garvan said yesterday that he will not bring attention to the present Grand Jury, the unofficial charges that county funds had been advanced to Davis. It is understood that he will await developments, including the possible coming of Hudson county of a special Senate committee of inquiry. Mr. Garvan, former State Senator, Edwards and Lawyer Bowen were all together yesterday in the President's office.

HOUSE MINORITY LEADERSHIP

EASTERN REPUBLICANS MAKE A BID FOR THE PLACE.

They Have Practically Made an Alliance With Two Western Delegations and Claim to Have a Majority—Payne, Olmsted and Weeks Are Candidates.

WASHINGTON, March 24.—Elbowed aside for many years by combinations of delegates from the middle and far West the Eastern Republicans are about to make a bid for the minority leadership of the House of Representatives. With this idea in view they have practically effected an alliance with two big Western delegations, which they claim gives them a majority of the Republicans of the next House.

Three Eastern Republicans aspire to the minority leadership. They are Sereno E. Payne of New York, Marlin E. Olmsted of Pennsylvania and John W. Weeks of Massachusetts. Representative Weeks is taking the lead in the movement of Eastern Republicans to capture the House leadership. He has made a canvass of the situation and it is understood claims that eighty-three Republicans of the new House are favorable to the selection of an Eastern man as minority leader. The delegations that are said to be favorable to the plan are those from New England, New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, Ohio, Michigan, Tennessee and Kentucky.

The campaign of the Eastern contingent is based on the theory that Joseph Cannon will neither seek nor accept the place as minority leader. It is known, of course, that Mr. Cannon has no ambitions in this direction. He wants the honor to go to some regular Republican. While it is generally believed that Uncle Joe favors Representative James R. Mann of Illinois doubt is expressed that the former Speaker will take sides, inasmuch as all of those who will receive consideration are his friends.

The argument of the Eastern contingent is that it is time recognition was accorded to the House by the Republicans of the House. Since the retirement of Thomas B. Reed of Maine the West has controlled the Speakership. David B. Henderson of Iowa succeeded Mr. Reed as the presiding officer of the House. Mr. Henderson was succeeded by Mr. Cannon, who has been Speaker for eight years. Eastern Republicans insist that the time is opportune for the East to pave the way for the election of one of their number to the Speakership when the Republicans again come into control of the House. With the delegations from Ohio, Michigan, Tennessee and Kentucky willing to ally themselves with the Eastern Representatives it is apparent that an interesting struggle is to be waged over the minority leadership.

Friends of Representative Mann view the "Eastern movement" with some alarm. At the close of the recent session they appeared to believe that the lively delegate from Chicago would win in a walk. There was no disposition among Eastern Republicans at the time to put up much of a fight against Mr. Mann. Since then members from the East have been coming forward with the result that they now believe that if Michigan, Ohio, Kentucky and Tennessee stand by them one of the Eastern members will be named to lead the minority in the new House.

Undoubtedly the Eastern contingent will favor either Representative Weeks or Representative Olmsted for the minority leadership. Representative Payne, not expected to make a formidable candidate, is a good organizer and is regarded as one of the most effective harmonizers among the House Republicans. Representative Olmsted has had more experience and is almost recognized as one of the ablest parliamentarians in the House. Mr. Weeks will undoubtedly have the support of a majority of the Republicans from the New England and middle Atlantic States. Mr. Olmsted may have trouble in having his own delegation. In this event his candidacy would be weakened.

While no formal call has been issued it is understood that the House Republican plan is to hold their party caucus on April 3, the day immediately before the caucus of the House. The caucus will be held in the House. They will discuss the matter of committee assignments as well as the minority leadership. There may be a bitter fight over committee assignments.
